

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An electronic still camera includes a photographing optical system, an image pick-up device, and a transmission optical component. Light rays of an object which are passed through the photographing optical system are incident on the image pick-up device through the transmission optical component. The transmission optical component is shaped so as to shift an image point of an object image formed through the photographing optical system rearwards.